  Alibaba.com (https://www.alibaba.com/)

- CNN (http://www.cnn.com) and MSNBC (http://www.msnbc.com)

Describe how the two sites you chose to review exhibit the design principles of repetition, contrast, proximity, and alignment.

ANSWER:

Aliexpress (https://www.aliexpress.com/);

Constrast - Most icons are differentiated to help users quickly find what they need and avoid confusion when choosing. Discounts and other items are also highlighted separately.

Ex.
Ex2.

Repetition – Website have a red theme, which creates the impression of a discount (red price) to attract attention. For example, all discounted prices are red, while regular prices are black. Coupons and other items are also red.

Alignment - Buttons, themes, navigation, footer, coupons, and so on are located within their own block in a row, and all products extend down the screen, allowing you to view as many products as possible and focus solely on them.

Proximity - The website displays everything in blocks that appear in a row. This helps you understand that one row contains one product and another another. The website interface is always at the top, even if you scroll down, and all additional information is in the very bottom block.

The New York Times (https://www.nytimes.com/)

Constrast & Repetition - The website has a simple newspaper-like theme, with black text, a white background, and illustrations. This allows the headlines to stand out and the images to be clearly visible. The simple text adds a sense of depth.

Allignment - Everything is in its own blocks, important articles in their own, the site has a unique grid like a newspaper, and if the user wants, he can scroll through them.

Proximity - All article photos are located directly opposite the article itself, just as headings are above the text, navigation is at the top, and the footer is at the bottom.
